

All chemistry

by Moritz S.

1. The image

Recently there have been some profound insights and teachings on the “unseen beyond the seen” by fellow believers in Jesus Christ. Perhaps not coincidentally I myself experienced something interesting along these lines.

Last Christmas season I was asked by a local fellowship to prepare a short sermonette or something for the last meeting of the year.

I set apart a day to fast and seek the One for inspiration, who is the trustworthy expert moving in the unseen realm – Holy Spirit, the third person of the Trinity who is equal in nature with the Father and the Son.

I saw an image that day. It was a small chemistry lab desk. There was a glass vessel with a clear bright looking liquid. And there was another clear bright looking liquid dropping into the first one from another glass vessel. They looked the same and to the human eye they could have both been water. So they mixed and apparently nothing happened, like you would expect from putting water into water. But then in one second suddenly the whole liquid instantly changed into a completely dark color.

I found out later it was a classical chemical clock experiment, the so-called Landolt reaction.

In this iodine clock experiment two colorless solutions are mixed and at first there is no visible reaction but after a short time delay, all the sudden and with great dramatic effect the liquid turns to a dark blue iodine/starch complex.

This common free video demonstration on Youtube (also Wikimedia) should give you an idea and if you’re unfamiliar with an iodine clock reaction I recommend watching it before reading on:

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xINEvrNAJuU&ab\_channel=Sarrus

I instantly got a specific meaning and message from all of this because while I was waiting on God, I was pondering certain theological topics, especially how to possibly communicate the lateness of the hour to brothers and sisters in Christ who may not be up to speed with the exponential acceleration of world events and developments behind the scenes.

Alright, this is my interpretation of what I saw on the lab bench:

The first liquid, there is or at least should have been a pure mankind / a pure church body of the Man Christ Jesus.

The second liquid, then there is deception / bodily, soulish and spiritual intoxication and pollution which is also seemingly innocent and light in appearance; catching you off guard if you don't watch and check from what source or channel it comes.

The interval period where everything is the same until it isn't; in the "unseen" realm there is a rapid chain-reaction changing the very nature of the whole liquid. The change is fulfilled and only then it outwardly displays itself instantly.

So in the endtimes the great falling away as well as the great deception will come with such speed and force that unsuspecting Christians that don't have a clue about the signs of the time will be completely overwhelmed and paralyzed, unable to grasp or process what is happening before their eyes. They could have known and should have known better if they checked the intrusion all around them for themselves or if they listened to the watchmen warning them for years. Perhaps they even studied some prophecy but they sadly simply expected to eventually see a slow change of color over time which they then could acclimate to.

I specifically got the impression that this image teaches something about the Mark of the Beast. I'm sure there are technological/magical components in a synthesis when it comes to the transformation of body and soul, most of all it must represent the ultimate spiritual rejection of the trust in God and his promises of heaven as well as provision on earth, in favor of the promises and provision of the world system of the Antichrist.

What I feel to add: The thing is, at first the people taking it, even volunteering and demanding it, will look the same, just healthier and happier, seemingly proving all conspiracy theorists and doomsayers and religious lunatics wrong. So more people will be talked into taking the Mark because they surely will stay the same, just better. Yet inwardly the clock is irreversibly ticking. The ability to be convicted by the Holy Spirit and hear the voice of God will just fade away perhaps without the people themselves realizing it but it's something they won't even care about anymore or won't be even bothered with again. This would be the honeymoon-period with the Beast.

Now at this point I just want to make sure the readers are on the same page. Only if you've come to realize that we're indeed in the very last days of this age, all of this will reveal its practical relevance for your lifetime. What must come to pass, does not happen – to use the vocabulary of the chemical laboratory – in a vacuum but a real world environment.

If this wasn't the case, the Beast system could arise in 1500 AD or 3000 AD with the actual circumstances of human societies and technological capabilities being completely irrelevant. But this is not the case, there are certain critical conditions that simply did not exist back in 1500 AD, but now have come to fruition, and these would disappear again long before 3000 AD if the peaceful and voluntary progress leaning towards freedom in our social order would ever catch up with the fulfillment of technological utopia hinted at in our daily news as we speak.

Meaning there is a time window. A short period where the absolute power to make or break the future is still concentrated in relatively few countries and relatively few hands of the so-called elites. A short period where the potential for a push towards total global centralization of all political, social, financial and economic power exists before the window of opportunity closes and humanity would eventually figure out how to walk a golden path resulting in independent highly-developed and self-sustaining nations and smaller communities not lacking anything anymore in socioeconomic terms, with every single individual having free time and resources to finally mind spiritual matters until Jesus comes home, with no collective need to ever give up their power unto the Beast out of worldly desperation.

Looking at this big picture purely from the scientific standpoint of a historian and sociologist, you can define a practical necessity and a logical reason why Satan needs to make his move now (i.e. in the present fragile period with its unique framework conditions; I would give it at most from 2025 to 2075 before it's auto-dissolved in a global jubilee or 49 years from now, with the first 7 years of it being the most fragile moments before the risk of disaster sharply declines and exponentially shrinks and fizzles out over decades). Even if you disregard theology completely, if you ever want to become a world dictator you have to go for it immediately. Now or never, when I look at the data.

Christians of all people should be concerned with this. "But woe to the earth and the sea; with great fury the devil has come down to you, knowing he has only a short time" (Revelation 12:12). Yet too few are paying attention and too many fail to discern the signs of the times anyway, perhaps because they become afraid when they ponder the scenario and its consequences?

Well, admittedly the road leading up to the Antichrist having his day on earth would be one hell of a ride. I can give you an approximate assessment in a super-condensed fashion:

Right now we witness in our daily news the rollout of the soon to be possessed artificial intelligent infrastructure for the beast-system and authoritarian structures have already been successfully beta-tested everywhere under the guise of the last global health crisis. A cataclysmic event is needed to bring down the old world order once and for all, to initiate a meltdown of the global financial system combined with the total collapse of modern societies

– a short and somewhat limited but decisive thermonuclear phase of World War III is obviously ready to be triggered and would do the trick, resulting in contemporary mankind losing all securities and certainties in the process, for the first time ever simultaneously in a shared global trauma.

Then like a phoenix from the ashes, Lucifer's well-prepared and well-equipped deep state in the shadows and bunkers of the underground, will step to the forefront for the worldwide audience to turn the lights back on and bring food back on the table, to reestablish peace and security among the ruins, reinventing fairness and prosperity with a new interconnected global technological system of exchange and accounting, while announcing a new order of worldwide reconciliation headed by the man of the hour, the man with the plan, the man of hope and change, the Man of Sin. The key offered to escape the virulent plagues and poverty and to join all the nice and decent global citizens in their golden new age is to willfully sign up with their agenda and then receive the entry ticket, the Mark connected with the enhancements required and even requested by the masses, updating your now transhuman body for perfect protection and promised participation, fundamentally reconstructing the image of Man and changing your innermost makeup. Without these enhancements and its certified digital identification, no one will be able to partake in a smart society anymore, i.e. no buying or selling, no workplace or healthcare or right to move around or use public transportation or the internet anymore. Hardly a far-fetched assumption in the days of Paypal and mRNA gene therapies, I know...

Step by step this interpersonal and ultimately interneural network (perhaps based on Elon Musk's Neuralink which isn't science fiction) will quickly become mandatory and will be officially presented not only as the solution to all medical and economic and social problems but as the next step in human evolution, creating a global emotional predatory hive-mind experience for the masses inducing artificial euphoria through the manipulation of neurochemistry and harmonic frequencies, hailed by the False Prophet as the necessary inclusive and loving unification of all religious feelings. A mass hysteria based on subjective experiences that will be absolutely convincing for all those who rejected the love of the truth so they are given over to the big lie and the great deception, and they will be developing a growing hatred for the Biblical truth and the "outdated" Christians who as marginalized outliers and outsiders in society, will be perceived as a nuisance and then a pestilence among them.

In confirmation of the supposed new Christ, chosen by providence and even defying a deadly headwound, lying signs and wonders will fill the skies, thanks to seemingly godlike quantum-based sentient machines and plasma-based living crafts, with the host of fallen angels manifesting themselves openly as self-proclaimed friendly visitors from beyond earth, returning after millennia to congratulate and assist mankind once more in their evolution to higher levels of divine consciousness. If only the air of the new dawn would be cleared completely and all the enemies of the state removed, all the saboteurs and terrorists and especially those pesky relicts clinging to an old book who deny the godly figure visibly enthroned in Jerusalem and therefore endanger the planetary shift and harmonic uplift of mother earth.

Seriously, wouldn't one do god a favor if in a "compassionate [final] solution" one would remove the heads of these retards unfit for spiritual evolution so their feeble souls can reincarnate on another planet to learn their basic lessons anew? Yeah, they really talk like this and said "compassionate solution" is a quote...

Meanwhile the church of Jesus Christ, the actual and only Christ for mankind (it's not our Savior's last name, it's His title!) will look down the barrel of a gun, perhaps surprised they were not raptured out of here ahead of time before trouble and tribulations began and instead have to endure 42 months of hell on earth, and worst of all, mostly paralyzed and overwhelmed and therefore unable to simply speak truth to power and truth in power. A shame, but it has been foretold, although you yourself can be and should be one of the exceptions. The Book of Revelation is directly promising a blessing to those who actually study it ("Blessed is the one who reads aloud the words of this prophecy, and blessed are those who hear, and who keep what is written in it, for the time is near", Rev. 1:3)

Bible-knowledge is the antidote to fear. Take it in and take it before the hour comes when you're in the line at McDonald's and a holographic image of the beast demands to see the smart-tattoo on your right hand to validate your coupons.

Can we go on with the program now? Ok thanks.

2. A wide field

Personally, I'm very much a layman in chemistry. I found it odd to witness imagery that's from outside my field of scientific expertise. But it sure made me curious what additional meaning could be discovered if you take your time and a closer look, if you take a seat like in an art gallery and take the picture in, the picture being the tapestry of chemistry.

Professional chemist George B. Hill spent 43 years in medical research and recently wrote in a neat little book, initially in a blog, how he decided to explore common principles and processes of practical chemistry through a series of Christian reflections on regular words and terms scientists use in their ordinary language every day at work in the laboratory. So his book "Discovering Jesus in a Chemistry Lab. 52 reflections from a Bench" has nothing to do with some wild experiment to "prove God" but everything with using each of the specific words like a lense to magnify some of the Bible's universal truths:

"Some, of course, were met by us in our school days. Thus, most or all of us will have heard of – and might once have performed – acts like the crushing, drying, or distillation of a chemical. We may remember names like preparation, reaction, transformation, or even quenching."

Take the invitation to survey the tedious overall process of Purification (this being one such keyword) that the chemist must undertake for the sake of his precious product, during which we must never underestimate the demands of this on our patience. You get the idea. Actually fellow author Ruth Bancewicz of Christians in Science used the same fun approach in her book “God in the Lab” that pointed out how a lab is not just a place but a group of people, since every experimenting scientist knows that all success is team success. This example indeed can lead to some great reflections on the body of Christ.

These authors modestly stated they were just occupied with “mere chemistry” and yet I immediately felt reminded of C.S. Lewis’ ingenious book “Mere Christianity”. Dr. Samuel Johnson, famous lexicographer and according to the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography “arguably the most distinguished man of letters in English history”, charmingly defined in his first dictionary the “Chymist” as “a professor in chemistry; a philosopher by fire.” Now how to manage both?

Metaphorically speaking, in the following text I want to draw a rather elaborate crop circle in this field of science to make certain underlying truths visible. Some to embolden the human children of God and some to spell doom for all satanic forces daring to lay hands on them; reaching from the life of two of the greatest scientists and their walk with God to the Two Witnesses of the book of Revelation who are about to openly return to the world stage. All of this interlinked in a panoramic view from this perspective:

Truth with a capital † is a person, it’s the Lord Jesus Christ, and when you get to know him, all other minor truths can be discerned. When it comes to knowledge as well as wisdom for discovering the depths of supernatural as well as natural revelation, proceed as it is written: “Test all things; hold fast what is good.” (1 Thessalonians 5).

There have always been theological reflections on the elements since they literally touched everything in daily life from the clothing people wore, the shelter they took, the energy they harnessed and the soil they grew stuff on.

Genesis 1 and 2 reflect the widespread ancient belief that all things are compositions or arrangements of earth, fire, water and air; with these four elements not being just building blocks but somehow founding, initiating, sustaining and animating all matter and processes in nature. This pre-materialistic conception not only included the question how the elements were related to underlying or overshadowing spiritual matters or supernatural processes but it necessarily touched the question about the relationship between creation as a whole and its creator. This universal discussion took place in every region and religion, especially in a highly advanced and sophisticated society like Egypt, where the Most High God chimed in with His clarifications given to His servant Moses, himself royally educated and familiar with all debates and the scientific discourse of his day.

This enabled the correct understanding of Jahwe/Jesus as Shaddai/Pantokrator and resulted in the iconography of Orthodox Christian Egypt and later Greek/Russian churches, where the Lord of All is depicted as presiding over the lands of this world as well as the zodiac signs.

This reminds me of the great reliquary cross in the Engelberg Abbey, an Alpine monastery founded in 1120. While on the gilded frontside each of the four ends of the cross display an artistic rendering of one of the four Evangelists, on the backside the four ends of the cross are depicting one of the four classic elements Earth, Fire, Water, Air which are themselves (including all associated workforce and principalities) rightfully under the supreme majesty and authority of Jesus Christ.

I once read that the pretty quick Christianization of the Celtic people especially in Ireland was supported by the presentation of Christ Jesus as the “lord of the elements”, which was such an overpowering revelation for the pagan druids that they rushed to convert to the true religion, in an astonishing contrast to another but rather embarrassing priest caste, the learned elders of Israel.

3. There and back again

Centuries later, Irishman Robert Boyle (1627 – 1691) became one of the great minds of the early modern age. Alchemy and chemistry were synonyms until the early 18th century. A father of modern chemistry, Robert Boyle was indeed a well-connected and corresponding member of the larger alchemist community and very much interested in the philosopher's stone, in the transmutation of metals, especially in chrysopoeia (the making of gold). Yet with his focus on experimental designs he rejected preconceived notions and doubted the usefulness of Empedocles' standard-model of the four elements (earth, air, fire, water) as well as Paracelsus' three principles (salt, sulfur, mercury) for practical research.

So in his 1661 publication “The Sceptical Chymist” Boyle argued for a strictly empirical scientific approach; in fact he was the first one to use the term “chemical analysis” for the process of breaking a complex substance into smaller parts in order to gain a better understanding of it.

Robert Boyle made crucial contributions that were necessary for the periodic table of elements to be compiled, introduced the litmus test to distinguish acids from bases, and discovered the basic law of gas dynamics, known as "Boyle's Law," that if the volume of a gas is decreased, the pressure increases proportionally.

As a founder of the Royal Society, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society (FRS) in 1663, and he had profound influence on contemporaries like his younger friend Isaac Newton. Eventually the Boyle Mountains in Antarctica, a lunar impact crater on the backside of the moon, and the asteroid (11967) Boyle were named after him.

Robert Boyle was a deeply religious protestant and devoted much time and effort defending the faith and propagating the compatibility of science and Christianity ("Boyle lectures"). Rest assured, this did not mean Boyle made compromises when it came to the authority of Scripture, quite the opposite, he emphasized the importance of faith in the Word of God concerning things beyond the current scientific knowledge of the day :

"There are diverse truths in the Christian religion, that reason left to itself would never have been able to find out ... Such as ... free will ..., that Christ should be born of a virgin, and that in his person there should be united two such infinitely distant natures as the divine and human".

He who is cool with Jesus is cool indeed. Today we Christians certainly have a reasonable reflex against the "alchemical" branch of chemistry but let's not ignore the specific framework conditions this monumental task of discerning natural phenomena took and had to take place in over the course of many centuries. Not to mention that scientific progress in post-modern times itself is more and more resulting in a post-materialist understanding of reality behind the veil, like quantum physics does in physics. So holistic chemistry could very well end up re-integrating some of its "medieval"/ "mysterious" / "magical" aspects, not with a necessity (but probably with the temptation) to claim it all for a revived mystery religion.

Again, Truth with a capital † is a person, it's the Lord Jesus Christ, and when you get to know him, all other minor truths can be discerned. From alchemy to chemistry, as it is written: "Test all things; hold fast what is good." (1 Thessalonians 5).

Likewise the previous rediscovery of Greek and Roman classics from a predominantly pagan past during the period known as the renaissance (14th -16th century) was not something negative per se. The term "Renaissance man" was often applied to gifted people who sought to develop their abilities in all areas of accomplishment: intellectual, artistic, social, physical, as well as spiritual. One cannot just assume that every aspiring intellectual in that age referencing and reflecting the discourses or thoughts of Western antiquity automatically surrendered to what we nowadays would identify as "Western esoterism" in the actual sense.

Well-meaning Christians could cause others, who were not properly introduced to Jesus yet, to stumble by throwing the door right in their face by claiming: "If you're associating with unconventional thinkers or artists and take anything from them, you might as well be a devil-worshipper". And a delighted Devil might just nod: "My point exactly. So if you guys find any merit or truth or beauty in these things, it's all mine, so you must join me, no?"

When you take a look at Robert Boyle you see the greatest scientist of his days who had tested quite literally everything he could get his hands on or wrap his mind around. After all, most importantly, he held on to a Biblical worldview with a keen understanding of the times and ages:

"In Noah's time a deluge of impiety called for a deluge of waters ... and so when - in the last days - the earth shall be replenished with those scoffers mentioned by Saint Peter, who will walk after their own lusts, and deride the expectation of God's foretold coming to judge and punish the ungodly, their impiety shall be as well punished as silenced by the unexpected flames ... that shall either destroy or transfigure the world."

"The present course of nature shall not last always, but that one day this world ... shall either be abolished by annihilation, or which seems far more probable, be innovated, and as it were transfigured, and that, by the intervention of that fire, which shall dissolve and destroy the present frame of nature: so that either way, the present state of things, - as well natural as political - shall have an end."

As I see it, Boyle passes the litmus-test for historical awareness of what is really important for mankind from Genesis to Armageddon.

4. Further East

Robert Boyle not only financed the distribution of bibles to the common Irish people during his lifetime, he went on to provide in his Last Will and Testament:

"Fifty pounds ... for an annual salary so some learned Divine or Preaching Minister ... to preach eight sermons in the year, for proving the Christian Religion against notorious Infidels, viz., Atheists, Theists, Pagans, Jews, and Mahometans, not descending lower to any controversies that are among Christians themselves ... and encouraging ... any undertaking for Propagating the Christian Religion in foreign parts."

Robert Boyle was a director of the East India Company and in this position he spent large sums supporting missionary societies in India. In fact he consciously used his position contrary to the official policy of the East India Company that was opposed to missionary activities because it feared such activities would provoke irritation amongst the local population and make them suspicious of British ambitions in India - and the supreme directive of the English and later Anglo-American imperialism has always been: Money First.

I want to dwell on India for a moment and for a reason.

According to orthodox tradition Christianity was introduced to the Indian subcontinent by Thomas the Apostle in 52 AD which technically makes the Church in India older than the Church in Europe. It took another 500 years to firmly establish a church organization according to the East Syriac Rite along the Western coast. But then the steady influx of Christianity and the support lines from the West were cut off when the rise of Islamic states in the Near and Middle East blocked the land route, at least up until the Portuguese came by sea and were pretty surprised to find Christian communities there (somehow surviving a thousand years without the Roman papacy).

Another surprise for Westerners is that what we usually hear about the dominant religion of Hinduism, how it is this “5,000 year old intricate system of the most ancient religion of mankind”, isn’t exactly true. Even some Indians pointed out that Hinduism as we know it today, is relatively young and perhaps the youngest of the world religions. It’s simply not like it was something that was set up by the Indus Valley Civilization in 3500 BC and just kept running. The thing is, Hinduism wasn’t a single religion to begin with and more a regional amalgamation of ceremonial customs and popular mythologies with Vedic culture and other local cults; sometimes clumping up a bunch of deities, sometimes forming more or less non-theistic offshoots like Buddhism (which Westerners usually associate with East Asia, but it was initially founded by an Indian monk, just like the famous Shaolin Kung Fu in China by the way).

Compared to the Abrahamic or mediterranean religions we naturally have in mind when we talk about faith, Hinduism was never a monolith but an ever changing hot mess slowly cooling down. The world’s oldest Hindu temple, the Mundeshwari Devi temple, was built in 108 AD (that’s after Christ and after the destruction of the second temple in Jerusalem in 70 AD for that matter), most of the famous ones many hundred years later. Under growing external religious and political pressure over the last thousand years, Hinduism became somewhat more condensed and focused on fighting its opponents which ultimately resulted in today’s more and more violent and aggressive Hindu-nationalism gaining power in India and even within Indian communities overseas.

Modern Hindu-nationalists claim that all Indian history, traditions and culture are always synonymous with Hinduism, meaning all things from meditation to martial arts and all the various practices subsumed today under the terms of yoga or tantra were originating and are inseparable from the Hindu religion.

Now we have the baffling situation that critical Indian Christians have rejected these claims for a while and were stating that the spectrum of meditative practices has been part of the Indian way of life in general and does not belong to a specific religion, but can be and has been charged with different spiritual content over the ages, while Western Christians just accepted the Hindu proposal that it's all theirs. No wonder young Westerners fascinated with the East and discovering good things in these cultures then took this agreement on face-value and felt led to jump of the spiritual bridge their parents were walking on.

Sad, because Truth with a capital † is a person, it's the Lord Jesus Christ, and when you get to know him, all other minor truths can be discerned. From Asia minor to Asia major, as it is written: "Test all things; hold fast what is good." (1 Thessalonians 5).

In later centuries the powers of darkness started their counterattack from India by the fabrications of "Theosophy" falsely so called (there is an older speculative branch in Jewish and Christian theology with the same name). This unholy theosophy invented in the 19th century is basically a mixture of esoteric Buddhism and esoteric Hinduism repackaged for export to the West, claiming to reveal the secret workings of a 5,000 year old brotherhood guided by a spiritual hierarchy of Ascended Masters (with some fake little master Jesus among them) who help the presiding hidden monarch, the King of this World, supervise the spiritual evolution of humanity, culminating in the arrival of another Christ to teach and rule the earth. Since the late 1800s they were welcoming new disciples in the West to join their ranks and with some very heavy supernatural help of seemingly benevolent spirit guides get to the top of their leading companies, masonic lodges, banks, militaries, governments and international organizations to prepare the way for their masters to manifest themselves and their king to openly take over the world one day (the "externalization of the hierarchy" according to their writings).

Well of course these masters are fallen angels of Satan and herald the coming rule of the Antichrist. Go figure. They aren't exactly subtle and it isn't rocket science to put it into a Biblical frame. Gee, I wonder what our pastors will do about it? From what I've heard the fallen ones themselves were pleasantly surprised just how dumb and stupid the church in general has become in the last fifty to a hundred years. They know they have already conquered the West and nothing will stop them anymore from implementing their global system, today they can already pull off the most occultic ceremonies and rituals at great public events of all kind, because the Christians in general have eyes that see but do not see; the fallen ones do so to rub it under God's nose that His children are idiots.

These are precisely the guys who for the last 200 years stole the most attractive aspects of Eastern cultures, claimed them to be wholly original or exclusive to themselves, mixed in doctrines of demons, and modified it until it finally became an ideology that is both cohesive (theosophical authors like Helena Blavatsky or Alice Bailey tend to have the same ghostwriters, pun intended) and dynamic (fit for an active Western mentality, in stark contrast of the moody stagnation of India proper).

Before that, there was nothing that was able to woo Europeans spiritually, even when you took a keen interest in India 400 years ago like Robert Boyle did. Admittedly, there were actually very interesting pre- and parascientific thoughts and theoretical speculations in Indian culture that may yet hold some value for the post-materialistic natural and (al)chemical sciences. Namely the concept of multiple layers or planes of created reality and multiple (etheric/astral) bodies. But once again, these are minor points and I'd like to quote Robert Boyle for the most important realization which is found in the Bible "that the bodies of good men shall be raised from death and so advantageously changed, that the glorified persons shall be like or equal to, the angels."

Robert Boyle also wrote:

"Our Savior would love at no less rate than death; and from the super-eminent height of glory, stooped and debased Himself to the sufferance of the extremest of indignities, and sunk himself to the bottom of abjectness, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme."

God, the creator Himself, for over thirty years lived a life near to us in every way as an ordinary man in the Near East. Compare this to the lesser deities once created by Him, the ones who abused mankind and found pleasure in unjustly ruling over them while demanding their worship and sacrifices. Not to mention the millions of demons preying on billions of Indians. None of them were willing to waive their extraordinary status and abilities to walk in the shoes of these lowly mortals for one day, and even if they would have wanted to, they would never have been able to stomach a lifetime of suffering, indignation and deficiency, stranded in this decaying physical realm.

The most high God though not only talked the talk but walked the walk and still did so without sin. That is so remarkable, even among righteous heavenly beings only the Lamb is worthy to open up all seals in Revelation 5:2.

Even so in our days, the more I'm informed on all the extraordinary technical and magical efforts and machinations prepared by Satan and his minions from all across the universe or multiverse for bending time and space to their will and dimensionally restructuring reality itself, reaching the absolute professional height of chemistry/alchemy or all natural sciences for that matter where science indeed becomes indistinguishably from magic, to deceive and destroy even the elect if it were possible ... the less I am marveling at it. But constantly I come across one testimony after another telling of Jesus changing lives today, visiting lonely people, healing the broken hearted, making people smile again, giving an eternity of attention for the most ordinary person ... and He is the One I marvel after.

This is a great gateway for the other scientist to be discussed, Blaise Pascal, who said: "Small minds are considered with the extraordinary, great minds are considered with the ordinary."

5. The Flow of Fire

Pascal made the most important contributions to the study of fluids, which I find to be another neat synchronicity in this article.

You know you did a good job when they have a unit of measure named after you, the pascal (symbol: Pa) being a unit of measure for pressure in the International System of Units (SI). Plus at 18 years of age he already constructed a mechanical calculator capable of addition and subtraction, known as a Pascaline, a forerunner of analog computation and computer engineering if you will.

Frenchman Blaise Pascal (born 1623 in Clermont-Ferrand, died 1662 in Paris) was also a mathematician, physicist, religious philosopher and master of prose. In literature, Pascal is regarded as one of the most important authors of the French Classical Period and known for his use of satire and witty polemics (something I admire, as did brother Elijah when he trolled the prophets of Baal) that enraged the absolutist "sun king" Louis XIV of France who had books of him burnt, as well as the Jesuits who constantly slandered and harassed the Catholic Pascal family who moved in independently-minded Catholic circles of the time that actually believed divine grace, rather than good works or obedience to the hierarchy, was the key to salvation.

He formulated not only the famous Pascal's law of pressure, he laid the foundation for hydraulic engineering as well as for the modern theory of probabilities, and – while being a man of letters and of science – taught the intimate experience of God through the heart rather than through reason.

He clashed with the rationalism of his contemporary René Descartes. Pascal wrote:

"I cannot forgive Descartes. In all his philosophy he would have been quite willing to dispense with God, but he couldn't avoid letting him put the world in motion; afterwards he didn't need God anymore".

But for Pascal "reason can decide nothing here" since humans were "in darkness and estranged from God" and so the living Creator "has hidden Himself from their knowledge", meaning intimate knowledge and such knowledge you could gain in a laboratory. Furthermore he stated:

"We know God only through Jesus Christ. Without this Mediator, is taken away all communication with God; through Jesus Christ we know God. All those who have pretended to know God, and prove Him without Jesus Christ, have only had impotent proofs. But, to prove Jesus Christ we have the prophecies which are good and valid proofs."

In another case he formulated what became to be known as "Pascal's Wager," which stated:

"How can anyone lose who chooses to become a Christian?

If, when he dies, there turns out to be no God and his faith was in vain, he has lost nothing -- in fact, he has been happier in life than his non-believing friends.

If, however, there is a God and a heaven and hell, then he has gained heaven and his skeptical friends will have lost everything in hell!"

When Blaise Pascal left this world at the early age of 39, after living his entire adult life in bad health and constant pain, a servant discovered by chance a hidden document carefully sewn into Pascal's coat. This very personal "Mémorial" documented a radical experience Pascal had, the "nuit de feu" or "night of fire". On the 23 of November 1654, between 10:30 and 12:30 at night, Pascal trembled and afterwards immediately grabbed a piece of paper to take notes while still shaking. The result speaks for itself:

The year of grace 1654

Monday, November 23, day of Saint Clement, pope and martyr, and others in the martyrology.

Vigil of Saint Chrysogonus, martyr, and others.

From about ten-thirty in the evening to about half an hour after midnight.

FEU (Fire).

God of Abraham, God of Isaac, God of Jacob, not of the philosophers and savants.

Certitude, certitude; feeling, joy, peace.

God of Jesus Christ. Deum meum et Deum vestrum.

"Thy God shall be my God."

Forgetting the world and everything, except God.

He is only found by the paths taught in the Gospel.

Grandeur of the human soul.

"Just Father, the world has not known you, but I have known you."

Joy, joy, joy, tears of joy.

I separated myself from him: Dereliquerunt me lantern aquae vivae.

"My God, will you abandon me?"

May I not be eternally separated from him.

"This is eternal life, that they know you, the only true God, and him whom you have sent, Jesus Christ."

Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ.

I separated myself from him; I fled him, renounced him, crucified him.

May I never be separated from him!

He is only kept by the paths taught in the Gospel.

Total and sweet renunciation.

Total submission to Jesus Christ and to mon directeur.

Eternally in joy for a day of trial on earth.

Non obliiscar sermones tuos. Amen.

In my opinion Pascal most certainly was what the ancient Greeks and Romans once called a polymath or polyhistor and later Renaissance man, an universal genius or Homo universalis.

He was called a Christian humanist. Christian humanism regarded classical humanist principles such as universal human dignity, individual freedom, and the importance of happiness as essential principles or goals of true Christianity. Jesus being the second and reconstituted Adam after all. Pascal wrote: "Man infinitely surpasses man."

So I guess when it comes to humanism, well-meaning Christians today sometimes throw out the baby with the bathwater. I think it's okay to hail the grandeur of the human soul, like Pascal put it. Or as I want to express it with a capital M, Mankind is awesome, a creation worth dying for. There I said it. And yet freemasonic philosophers and so-called Theosophists constantly cry and whine about allegedly self-loathing Christians lacking an aspiring or inspiring attitude and motto for a future imperium of Man... they really should get their heads out of their donkeys, they are the ones settling for a transformation of men into demigods which would actually be a downgrade for the image-bearers of the Most High.

Lest we forget: Truth with a capital † is a person, it's the Lord Jesus Christ, and when you get to know him, all other minor truths can be discerned. For the love of all the Sophias out there, as it is written: "Test all things; hold fast what is good." (1 Thessalonians 5).

Leftover footnotes concerning our heavenly brother Blaise the Based: In the French revolution militant atheists vandalized his grave. I'm sure the persons involved feel really dumb by now. The world moved on and just had to pay respect to Pascal's monumental contributions. The minor planet 4500 Pascal is named in his honor, as well as a programming language in IT, one of the universities of Clermont-Ferrand is also named after him, and perhaps most important, the red sea otter from Nintendo's Animal Crossing video game (the guy sells insurances to the villagers, not sure if the Japanese made a connection of wager policy and Pascal's wager but I do).

6. A cup of trembling

When you think back to chemistry class in school there were certain experiments the teacher rightfully told the children to not try at home. Fellow 90s kids might remember the cautionary tales of “Ask Mr. Lizard” from the clever TV-sitcom Dinosaurs which depicted the fatal kind of mind-blowing results in the lab.

I want to briefly discuss the sigil of Lucifer, with its depiction and description recently also publicly shared on the Hagmann Report, the screenshot reads: The sigil of Lucifer appears as a chalice, which represents creation, the fertile darkness awaiting and ready for untold possibilities. The purpose of it is that of an instrument of visual invocation during ritual. By performing the appropriate ritual, the sigil acts as a gateway to invoke and bestow the power and presence of Lucifer.

To me the propagandistic allure of its symbolism is striking: It's the promise of a refined liquid in a hallowed container, the consciously or subconsciously desired result being scooped out of the created and creative chaos in a cauldron or crucible containing the captured creation, your personal dreams then becoming manifested reality.

You don't think that's able to captivate the imagination of people? To be frank, most Christians today are not very engaged in or used to thinking at all, so perhaps it's too much to ask to take the non-Christian perspective for a second and see how even some of the most noble humans can be deceived by this. For educational purposes I walk you through the numbers, take it as a thought experiment.

First, just put aside your firm and absolutely correct knowledge and Biblical belief that Lucifer and Satan are the same entity. A spiritual person who starts as a blank slate can be told that there is a dark one, Satan, associated with nasty things said person might very much oppose, and then there is supposedly a bright one, associated with enlightenment which is nice to share. In the same way you put aside for a moment your firm and absolutely correct knowledge and Biblical belief that Jahwe or God of the Old Testament and Jesus or God of the New Testament are the same entity. A spiritual person who starts as a blank slate can be told that there is a scary one, Jahwe, associated with incomprehensible laws and deeds and probably a tyrant, and then there is supposedly a friendly one, Jesus associated with helping others. Now it's very easy to deceive such a spiritual person that if there's a devil at all it may as well be this bizarre YHWH and if there's a heavenly figure to be thanked it's liberal Lucifer who descended from his old position in rebellion and went on to free Adam and Eve in the prison of Eden by opening their eyes. Unless Jesus is in the picture, that's possibly what most people in the world would assume if they had to make up their minds on the spot. Naturally the hierarchy plays it safe and usually avoids explicit Bible-talk as long as possible and goes with other more exotic and esoteric starter kits.

Second, no worldview can indefinitely ignore Jesus because the question where and how HE fits into the narrative will always come, it cannot not talk about a Jesus. A false worldview must therefore present a Jesus that is not the true Biblical Jesus. It can be some imaginary Jesus who is called a wise philosopher or great prophet by other world religions. This is a Jesus the soft and inclusive world can stomach and embrace, him of being one of many ways to God. Or at the base level of Lucifer's hierarchy (the alleged cosmic brotherhood of good spirits and post-incarnated supermen) a little master Jesus among the greater ascended masters. Later they learn that at the top of this hierarchy is a King of the World who supervises the spiritual evolution of mankind in this age (therefore Lucifer's eye on top of the pyramid) as planetary avatar of some highest cosmic consciousness who is simultaneously a heavenly being and via his own human form revealing himself as world teacher or world healer soon "the Christ" for a new age, all of which degrades his predecessor from Nazareth to one of the disciples of this new up and coming "god for all on earth". That's the Biblical Antichrist (if you haven't been paying attention or your thinking cap runs on some cheap Chinese battery), a ruler that has to be actively installed under the right global circumstances by his human servants in positions of power. By birthright the dominion of earth still technically lies with mankind so according to God's rules mankind would have to give some legal frame of consent to invite the worst of the worst forces of darkness in, in this case through their official representatives who in most cases won't realize the full extent of what and who exactly they're about to summon.

Third, the hierarchy has the organization and the plan to pull this off. The involved humans – putting their little wills under the greater will of their masters – are deceived. They are often well-meaning people who are convinced they are the good guys serving a plan that is of “God”, but sadly the evil ones don’t actually care for them and they will absolutely get rid of them when they have outlived their usefulness, like (allegedly, allegedly) the second Secretary-General of the United Nations Dag Hammarskjöld who went out in a plane crash in 1961.

Only at the top level their spiritual handlers finally reveal (out of practical necessity / spiritual legality required for the last steps of their plan) to the initiates that their god is indeed Lucifer himself, but not as a mascot for the franchise of enlightenment as they have claimed before, but actually the very entity who is the Biblical Satan opposing Jahwe and His only begotten son, who is now admitted to be the actual Biblical Jesus soon to return. But of course Lucifer is said to be so great he will totally win the final battle and then would be allowed to keep his kingdom forever. It’s fascinating when you study the forgotten/hidden past how Satan was always (auto)suggesting the same thing again and again, like he would never lose the world before the flood or before that his nest among the stars alluded to in Obadiah 1:4.

Even at this point, after decades of careful preparation and deceptive illusions, there were some morally upstanding and very courageous Luciferian illumined ones jumping the ship after the Biblical identity of Lucifer as Satan was revealed to them, giving this knowledge to an otherwise clueless church (on a personal note: thank you C. & L. for sharing and your time) . To a church that of course didn’t really care or chose not to believe in conspiracies even though the Book of Revelation is a conspiracy story par excellence if you think about it (“My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge”, Hosea 4:6).

Of course Satan tried to murder the whistleblowers but he wasn’t able to touch those in the witness protection program of the Most High God. Shows you who’s sovereign right there.

And on the other hand it proves that whosoever trusts in the dark schemes of Lucifer and calls upon this devil to fill his or her glass of greed, will receive one promise from Satan that will not be kept and ends in disappointment instead, but he or she will additionally receive another promise (a free refill) that actually will be kept, this being an overflowing burning stream of divine wrath from the most high God until he or she is drowned in a lake of fire.

The only chalice Mankind really ever needs to fulfill its own dreams and its destiny to be a blessing for all of creation, is not that fancy sigil of Le conartitste extraordinare, but the ordinary wooden cup of a carpenter filled with friendship between men and God. That’s the fabled holy grail and the best wine is yet to come, shared in the New Jerusalem to cheer on the New Heaven and the Earth.

7. The image, part deux

Steve Quayle once publicly shared the profound intel in an interview that there is a war raging in the cosmos for millennia and the precious prize coveted by the forces of evil is the human soul.

I fear most did not understand what he stated. Perhaps some took it as a metaphorical lamentation of evil driving away humans from God and causing them to lose their souls. Well yes but no. No, it was about intelligent evil coveting the human soul, the very grandeur of it, like they would a very specific item with a unique quality to repurpose it.

They could dissect/disassemble/dissociate people's bodies and minds as much as they wanted and then went on to reassemble/rebuild/reverse engineer our species. In the end, although all parts and aspects were seemingly accounted for and then reused, some piece of the puzzle appeared to be suddenly missing. For a lack of better words, a peculiar flickering piece, one that always seems to slip through their fingers every time they try to finally get their hands on "it" or think they can pinpoint "it" to gain a full understanding of it.

The fallen angels do know living things with mind, will, emotions, intellect and all the qualities you would recognize as soulish – they are very much personalities with an identity-matrix or soul-equivalents themselves – and in all their laboratories on the various dimensional planes they never run into this irritating problem when dealing with or manipulating biological lifeforms or anything else in creation.

And this very last part is the crux of the matter. Man, Adam, is not just another humanoid or hominid, he is the man in the image of God.

This has less do to with a catalogue of attributes of personhood like self-awareness or free will, or some requirement for a job-application in the kingdom of God, or even empathy or creativity per se. This we might share with other entities who could even surpass us in every single category of power or intelligence, but...

No other creature from ants to archangels is created in the image and likeness of God and He Himself became only ever one member of one species He saw fit – in Jesus being fully God and fully Man. Neither the inception of the first Adam nor the incarnation of the second Adam was random. Mankind is fitting God, only Adamic Man does and no others do – an incomprehensible statement only believable if you believe in who Jesus says He is. Man and God, God and Man, the first and the last, the last and the first.

So Man is a species different from the start, just by being born as a member of it you have something very special on you so to say. The crown jewel of creation - not by your own merits but because of whose image you bear. No wonder malicious others were racing to extract and devour and master that special ingredient that must be there somewhere in us. Man is very much like others in creation, a part of creation, a created being, but...

I'm not building up to a "butt"-joke (although it would arguably prove my own humanity), but to this conclusion: Take away, as an evil interdimensional non-human scientist, everything from an individual human soul you would take away from another kind of soul, and yet there remains a still small shimmer in the darkness not accounted for in Creation. Now you as the higher dimensional researcher that you are, you stumble and fumble on your endless quest for its source unseen. A flame, you must assume, but where? The hidden flame of the illusive fire turns out to be just not there, or here or anywhere. Because the designation "where" simply does not apply anymore, it's "with whom" that flame is, and it's the One outside of Creation. Grandeur of the human soul indeed.

By definition, you cannot extract the Creator outside Creation, you cannot devour the Creator outside Creation, you cannot master the Creator outside Creation. He would only laugh at your devilish foolishness and hold you in derision. He Himself is the only one sovereign to decide to insert Himself into Creation in a species that fits Him (that's us), the only one sovereign to decide to give His flesh and blood to eat and drink to people he deems justified (that's us), and the only one sovereign to decide that we would be the right ones to rule and reign His Creation together with Jesus the only true Master of Mankind who will share His throne with us.

It must be nauseating for Lucifer, once the shiniest angel of light in creation, who rebelled against God because he saw himself as equal, to be now humbled by a younger creature he may have casually disregarded as a "strange monkey" or a "miserable pile of secrets". Normal men and women, who actually do outperform him as a light-bearer just by their ordinary existence in the image of God, already shimmering in His Most High Light from beyond Creation, and one beautiful new morning eventually turning into bright and shining temples of His Holy Spirit walking on the beaches of New Earth to become the ultimate powerhouses and dare I say lighthouses for a whole New Cosmos.

So it's not copyright-infringement when I tell you, yes you, dear non-Christian reader, that if you like yourself some illumination and you fancy yourself a Lucis-connoisseur, you just have to trust in the Man Christ Jesus to enlighten and supercharge you into eternity. For unlocking your true potential you must dismiss a certain has-been, the burnt-out fallen star who still invokes his old name for old glory sake and only appears to be still glowing (and doing so brilliantly, as it is said) because tons of magical illusionary glamour make-up while sitting in a pretty rad crystal throne room with some excellent interieur lighting (+ kudos, O greatest calamity of our age, for that enormous aquarium which must produce stellar contrasts; credit where credit is due; I'm not slandering the sun king of the age of Aquarius, just stating facts and putting them ... in the right light).

In the end, the greatest thing the enemy of God can effectively achieve, is to take out his satanic anger on the smallest and most innocent image-bearers and to violate and to cannibalize and to enslave the children. Ironically, by acting this way, the angel who wanted to be like the Most High proved himself incapable of being like the Most High once more by behaving this inhumane. And this sums up his character. So why should human Luciferians serve him? You're better than this. Literally. It's far more advantageous to stay silent for a moment and listen into yourself, into your very own still human soul and to ponder your shimmering Self, now don't you rather desire to fully reconnect to the humane OG Original God instead, huh?

Idealism and altruism are in general reliable human standards, one had to subscribe to faulty and outdated scientific behavior models in social biology or anthropology to conclude that humans were by nature a bunch of beasts and monsters. The fallen ones certainly would have loved this to be the case to make their own case before God, yet by their antihuman slander they still manage to inflict or fuel misanthropy and self-hatred in our kind which is the next best thing before they are ready to recreate some of us in their own image – which logically implies the need or necessity to do so - and to utterly genocide the rest of us.

I want to remind students of the Bible what the late Dr. Michael Heiser taught about what Hebrew scholars during the second temple period would have answered when asked why the world was in such a bad shape. It most certainly would not have been some lame nonsense about mankind being a cancer to the earth and men being horrible and terrible through and through. They would have put the blame where it belongs, namely the fallen ones, from the treacherous watchers descending on Mt. Hermon and actively teaching and leading people into witchcraft and warfare, to the little-g gods over the nations driving and forcing their allotted societies into depravity and destruction, to the disembodied spirits of the hybrid giants now roaming the earth as demons constantly manipulating and misguiding individuals on an emotional and ideological level. They would have put the blame on all the primordial and primal initiators and inspirators of wickedness, and they would have symbolically put that sin on a goat and send it out of their midst and into the desert, specifically addressed “to Azazel” and the likes of him to whom it belongs. The world will heal in time when the Lord Jesus returns, on the one hand to destroy all the works of the wicked ones and to shovel these prime predators into the ovens, and on the other hand to correct the remaining weaknesses in our flesh in the otherwise fine biological design of humanity (I trust in the Lord to refine this, in my mind I always pictured a white tree in a red valley).

In stark contrast to irredeemable evil beings like fallen angels and demons, regular humans in the image of God are inherently not bad but broken. Certainly the lower decks of the hierarchy and occasionally some upper echelons are full of people who are in it for a better tomorrow for all mankind. They are victims in more than one way and their fate is a tragic one if they don't get eventually suspicious and then angry at the liars to ultimately leave them for the real Lord Jesus who actually loves them. That's why I'm writing these lines, not because I want to talk sensational talk but because I want them and their souls to be saved. We would like to welcome them into the family of God like brothers and sisters. Oh, and there will be cake – and with Jesus the cake is no lie, in fact you shall inherit the whole bakery of His Father as well. Happy New Birthday you guys, if you would just kindly jump over your own shadow and the enemy's panicking lying voices within, and ask Jesus to be born again.

It's crucial for all men who are still lost, including Luciferians who are not yet reprobates, to repent (make up or change their mind about Jesus Christ) before they're confronted at last with the choice of taking the Mark of the Beast.

There is an invisible event horizon or point of no return, after which the Holy Spirit has nothing to work with anymore in a consciousness and the fate of the person is sealed and they are incapable of repenting. Taking the Mark of the Beast will be a quality step too far, no matter your interpretation why exactly this would be the case, no one comes back from that and everybody without exception will end up in the lake of fire. I find it to be pretty obvious when the fate of the fallen angels is taken into consideration (nothing new under the sun). They were once in heaven and saw God without a filter and then blasphemed the Holy Spirit to His face. There's no coming back from that, and they became fixed or locked-in a reprobate state. The image of this inner state was also inherited by their hybrid offspring from their unholy union with human women (see the whole Genesis 6 narrative in context with the book of Enoch), birthing the unclean unsanctioned lifeforms of the Rephaim and Nephilim, the giants and monsters of old, whose disembodied earthbound spirits after the flood of Noah became the class of unclean spirits colloquially known as demons (there were also smaller incursions after the flood; ever wondered how our loving God could order the extermination of certain people groups during the conquest of Joshua without any mercy? He saw people more or less not in His image occupying the territory reserved for the bloodline of the messiah. There's a scholarly debate to be had, up to what level of foreign/alien admixture a man would still be able to actually have enough agency and autonomy to overcome the dark urge, but this would be impossible to cover here).

As in the days of Noah, when the "gods" descended from the skies and walked the earth before and intermingled with the populations, leading to a "golden age" of antediluvian kingdoms ruled by vicious and violent demigods and their dynasties going on terrorizing, corrupting and downright eating regular humans (so that no pure descendant of Adam and Eve would remain to fulfill the proto-evangelion of the promised child eventually crushing the opposing seed and Satan himself), so shall it be again. The Mark of the Beast will get normal-born humans adopted into this family of abominations and inwardly recreated in the image of the Antichrist (the ultimate mixture of human and fallen angel, the son of a woman and Lucifer himself), born again with their polluted genetic profile and their unrepentant unclean soul demonically transforming them into a new creation (also in the eyes of God), eternally synchronized and quantum-entangled with the shared mindset of the fallen ones.

8. Liquid Love

Turning to Christ won't make life in this world easier. While we should get over the unpleasant fact that while the redeemed spirit is willing, the flesh is weak (Matthew 26:41), we should strive to put the body-soul-complex in line with the expectations of Jesus who thankfully clarified:

"Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind. This is the first and greatest commandment. And there is a second like it: 'You shall love your neighbour as yourself. The whole of the Law and the Prophets depends on these two commandments.' (Matthew 22:37-40)

So we can avoid endless fruitless discussions about the law, especially when we realize that some of the minor details and the restrictions you can struggle with, are likely resulting from the character of the Law being wartime-law or martial law, serving a certain function in time and space, and is about supporting behavior and outcomes the high command deemed necessary in this age for ritual or social reasons.

One day the dark nights of war will be over and the dawn of true peace approaches with the second coming of Jesus Christ. Then we can begin to truly live. Nobody should think true life in the new cosmos is about sitting on a little cloud and playing the harp for eternity. In all of human imagination, inspiration and intuition today we already have an omen of what I call the Adam Instinct, which one day thanks to the purifying work of our kinsmen redeemer will be able to express itself in its final form in the true likeness of God. Creative Man, serving and wielding the pristine and imperishable flame of the Creator Himself.

All relationships include trust-testing. What Lucifer failed to take by force after failing his personal test for trust or trustworthiness in Heaven, and fallen men were simply not allowed by God to wield without limits in the ancient days, renewed mankind under the victorious banner of Christ Jesus can be finally entrusted with in the future.

When part of the judgement for any unbelieving human sinner is to see the true – unimaginable before and now unreachable – splendor of heaven one time during the great white throne judgment before being cast into outer darkness, then Lucifer for once shall see the true – unimaginable before and now unreachable – grandeur of the humans he could have partnered with in a joint-venture, had he only decided to continue as trusted and cherished grand-vizier of heaven and to befriend us. That's why Lucifer who instead devolved into the sadistic psychopath narcissist Satan, now hates the Lord's true golden species so much that he's completely driven by jealousy and envy and must betray and destroy even the humans in his service or he wouldn't be able to look himself in the mirror anymore.

Yet even now, in a quite pragmatic way Lucifer realizes that if humans are somewhat special and in theory have special access and can perform in a special way (even are able to form or reform reality), but he cannot harvest their specialty directly, then he must practically direct them to do things he wants to achieve.

The incident at the tower of Babel ("gateway of the gods"), which wasn't about height but ritually opening an interdimensional portal to the highest heaven, is very telling, because God is stating about this effort of united mankind "Nothing that they have a mind to do will be impossible for them!" (Genesis 11:6) And this is quite the strong acknowledgment coming from God Almighty referring to the potential capabilities of humans created in His image.

Even if Satans hides it from this human followers and doesn't want to admit it out of pride, but for his last-ditch-efforts to somehow get out and away from his conflict with God with his kingdom intact and to establish his own separating branch of Creation where he can maintain his kingdom forever, he practically needs “the human touch” very much, meaning their special authority and special shining creativity.

As insiders who got out of Satan’s hierarchy concluded: We humans don’t need the “Ascended Masters” but they desperately need us. A few of us in the highest form of Satanists who after their final initiation consciously make a decision against the God of the Bible and deliberately worship Satan to enthroned him as lord of a new creation, and some more coerced by trauma-based mind control to serve them as human batteries to power their new reality matrix (you get the picture when you think of the movie with the same name). In both cases humanity would cease to exist in its original ideal conception, but would remain only as a caricatures before a gloating Satan who got away with becoming the most high god in his own parallel universe after surviving Armageddon. Which, of course, the actual most high God will not allow because this would be a complete perversion of the pristine ideal of godhood itself.

So if you’re one of the men or women in Satan’s service, you better realize you’re about to commit treason on your blood before it’s going to be spilled anyway. If you want to able to look yourself in the mirror because you haven’t degenerated to the point of sadistic narcissist psychopath yet, you will want to leave your wicked master with a rest of your spiritual dignity intact and restore your lost honor by the sheer will to from now on serve the right Master who has always loved you and who will by no means cast you out, neither as a personality nor as the last worker to show up. “Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:32) and perhaps I already mentioned it:

Truth with a capital † is a person, it’s the Lord Jesus Christ, as is human Triumph, individual and collective.

Everyone has to agree that in hindsight all the plans and works of Satan, the fallen Lucifer, obviously appear as the blatant ludicrous and disgusting failures that they truly are. All his attempts to divide God’s creation, all his attempts to build his own realms in the material or astral with the elements initially invented and provided by God, his attempts to set up breakaway civilizations to flee from God, his attempts to reach a stalemate with God and a negotiated coexistence “on the other side of the mountain” as Luciferian theology puts it ...

And in my humble Adamic opinion the most sickening, his attempts to create life on his own because he desired to be master of others wills and have subjects without own rights to worship him. While he was never able to find the fire of original creativity itself and to utilize it, he searched out and violated its creations to break and remold them in his own taste, spawning monsters and all kinds of hybrid or hubrid abominations (“The Shadow that bred them can only mock, it cannot make: not real new things of its own”, like Tolkien wrote). The only proper approach to such subcreation would be to bring your creative idea before the Lord like a boy bringing the drawing of a wish or dream to his dad. Of course it takes a human understanding of this situation to see the wisdom.

Naturally all other angels who stay loyal to God and fight the good fight for Lord Jesus because it is the right thing to do, will in no way lose anything when the day of peace is finally here. Au contraire, eyes have not seen nor ears heard the things which God has prepared for those who love Him (1 Corinthians 2:9), and this applies to them as well. Their rewards in a new heaven shall outshine all goods the rebellious angels had possessed or tempted them with, especially when all the wartime-rationing and restrictions are gone for good. Plus just like God via Jesus Christ is happy to share his seat with and extend his power to humans (Revelation 3:21) who He calls no longer servants but friends (John 15:15), why wouldn't those in His very likeness then be open to share their dominions in friendship with other fellows? Handing an angelic bro the keys to his chariot sounds like something a man would do. It is true (TRVE) human nature to want to be a blessing to everyone in the Divine Council, to them and for them Mankind shall be as the coming star of friendship, today already visible as a still small dot like when you watch the earthrise from the surface of Mars.

Speaking of friendship, let's consider the rest of creation:

In a twinkling of an eye, Man will be changed by God and finally incorruptible (1 Corinthians 15:51-52), we can be confident being confident of this, that He who began a good work in us will carry it on to completion (Philippians 1:6), in a holy Landolt-reaction if you will, where the decision already made in the past will be followed up by an open manifestation. This glorification of mankind will be a lucky day for all creation, as it is written: For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the sons of God (Romans 8,19-22).

Mankind is created in the likeness of God, therefore inherently motivated to act like He does when it comes to kingdom government, so every non-human inhabitant can take it to the bank of Heaven, that we redeemed and perfected humans will be predisposed to act in the same selfless and dutiful way for the benefit of the commonwealth, to use a very telling modern English word composition. Not only is an altruistic lord naturally by his own ambition the first servant of the whole realm (I also like the old English word ryche), he is inclined to let the people share in the government. For the constitution of the world to come, the love for the people is the deciding ingredient which is nowadays mostly fictitious in politics but will one day bring about a perfect synthesis of the all the noble but clashing concepts we try to grasp with imperfect political terms like “monarchy” and “republic” or “theocracy” and “democracy”.

(Sounds cheesy? Love is not cheesy, but good cheese is made with love, let no lactose-intolerant extremist tell you otherwise. And the French will confirm that cheese is best with wine so love becomes fluid. Since at the marriage supper of the Lamb there will be both love and wine, there will be probably cheese as well, but that's really beside the point.)

Meanwhile, I'm fed up with lesser gods talking smack about our sacred species that properly outranks them in the court of the Most High and in full maturity will judge them one day (1 Corinthians 6:2). Besides, a word of advice to non-human entities or factions on the fence or even those who foolishly assume they could weasel their own way between the current superpowers of Heaven and Lucifer's proper chain of command: you might want to rethink your career choices really hard in the last fading minutes of daylight before you're shaken off that fence and by default end up on the wrong side history. Or respectively you should lay down your arms, turn yourselves in peacefully at the next checkpoint of Heaven because among all your unpleasant options only an unconditional surrender might have perhaps an unforeseen favorable outcome. Take it from an Adamite, you can make a decision to believe in a result you're just not able to see right now.

Remember how brother Enoch campaigned on "Humans are friends not food"? Yeah, lots of weeping in Tartarus from those who thought they knew better...

Speaking of Enoch, it's about time for a good legacy sequel taking place on present earth, this time teaming up with Elijah, not just because we're running critically low on testosterone due to the disappearance of buddy action epics starring Mel Gibson and Sylvester Stallone, but because the two henchmen of Satan, the Antichrist and the False Prophet need to be countered with the Two Witnesses™. Oh, it's not an expected easy sailing for the powers of darkness and in fact never will be, they will always be challenged and reminded of their doom.

The two distinct gentlemen of God who walked with Him before will be two heralds proclaiming the truth and sounding the alarm for redeemable mankind but to the reprobates they are two dreadwolves already haunting their imaginations and messing with their installations and no telling when they come together and where they raid again and strike next. So no, no easy sailing at all when these two join forces.

9. Mere chemistry

There's a neat expression in the English as well as in the German language. When it's said "they have chemistry", it's usually referring to a spectrum of profound mutual attraction and seemingly effort- or wireless connection between people, implying an emotional or an intellectual or even a sensual compatibility, virtually demanding a communion or an understanding and bonding, something perceived “as it should be” and “was meant to be”.

With the enemy constantly lusting for power it’s amazing how he’s always fixating on shiny objects to give him power while not realizing that the true “rings of power” are actually – relationships! It’s the circle of friends we have, which in case of Christians just so happens to include the Lord God of Creation Himself.

Having chemistry with the Almighty elevates believers in Christ Jesus to God knows what heights. Literally. So, where does this leave Lucifer? In the dust. Eating dust, eventually moved to bow to Jesus and to confess that He’s Lord, before being ultimately assigned to a long-time study of sulfur in the Lake of His Fire.

It’s a peer-reviewed study but if a single Luciferian feels a sudden itching to opt out, I’m sure your molecules can still go elsewhere instead. While I’m not a master of prose, in closing I can offer you this one: “Don’t be foolish / be a smartie / come and join the Jesus party”. Beautiful, isn’t it? And so simple. Just. Ask. Jesus.

Oh look, new members also receive the philosopher’s stone! It’s the white one you get from Jesus in a personalized edition (Revelations 2:17). Man, that was easy, I just had to ask Him! Who knew. Well now you do.

There’s an additional colloquial expression, this time only in German: it is commonly observed every day in all ordinary areas of life from the workplace to the neighborhood and the markets, that sufficient B vitamins are the key to success.

Well, as much as the chemical compounds of B-complex vitamins like riboflavin or folic acid are essential for the breakdown of carbohydrates into glucose, it’s not a dietary supplement that will give you an edge when times are tough, but in “Vitamin B” the B stands for Beziehungen (relationships). When you need some favors to move forward you gonna need to know the right persons in the right positions and in the best case these people happen to be friends of yours.

These vitamins are quite elementary since it’s still a challenge to conclude one’s life as a Christian down here while there’s a supernatural opponent who lacks a sense of humor (and this is coming from a German!) and occasionally tries to murder you. Amazingly I kept surviving for longer than I thought with one of the most miserable track records of actually following the instructions of the Holy Spirit. Which means if someone who’s less a paladin and more a rogue (yours truly) can make it so far, absolutely everyone can count on God to miraculously carry him or her through, even if you're making your way out of Satan's inner kingdom.

I never had some guarantees like Enoch or Elijah who are firmly shielded from all harm to fulfill their ministry, but as a lowly little harbinger I did repeatedly pray psalm 143:12 like any believer can do in the face of danger: "In your lovingkindness, silence and destroy my enemies / And kill all those who afflict my life / For I am Your servant." I guess someone got the axe during my previous struggles but it wasn't me.

Prayer is the most powerful act when you can have faith that your request will be directly brought before the One who calls the shots. And why not have the courage to do exploits for your kingdom even if it means engaging the enemy? Perhaps not with as much success as Enoch or Elijah (although his successor Elisha had shown a brazen attitude and was ready to just go for it, to go even harder and to think even bigger), but every believer can achieve something and together all force is growing exponentially and is developing its own dynamics. If you remember the burning bush in the times of the Old Testament wouldn't you love to see the power of the New Testament as a blazing cross shining like the sun in the midst of the valley of death? And when in the Old Testament our kingdom was announced as a rolling rock growing into a large stone crushing all the kingdoms in its way, wouldn't you love to see said solar cross of ours in motion, like a sunwheel smashing right through the gates of hell?

Alright, he who sticks his head out might be cut short but that's not a given – it might also work out just fine and go even better than expected. So when my personal friend Jesus (luckily he's a much better and more reliable friend to me as I am to Him) gets me in touch with His father who owns this place and gets me a seat on the family table, does it really matter anymore how limited my own resources are? In the end(times) I will ask God to help me out/help me get things done/help me to help others – and I'm allowed the blessed hope to find favor.

It's all chemistry.
